Promulgating guidelines without penalties is nothing more than re-arranging deck chairs on the Titanic, but at tax payer expense. Wind turbine companies deny any impact of their machines on human health, let alone on fish, wildlife and the environment. Because of justifiable local opposition to wind turbines in urban and suburban settings, wind energy companies target rural America where there chances for success are considerably enhanced. Unfortunately, that's where the fish and wildlife live and the environment is mostly unspoiled . This is a Catch 22 situation where once again creatures that cannot lobby or vote on their behalf are caught between a rock and a hard place, doomed to their own destruction. And the best you can do is to promulgate guidelines. Shame on you!

Sincerely
